

problem statement

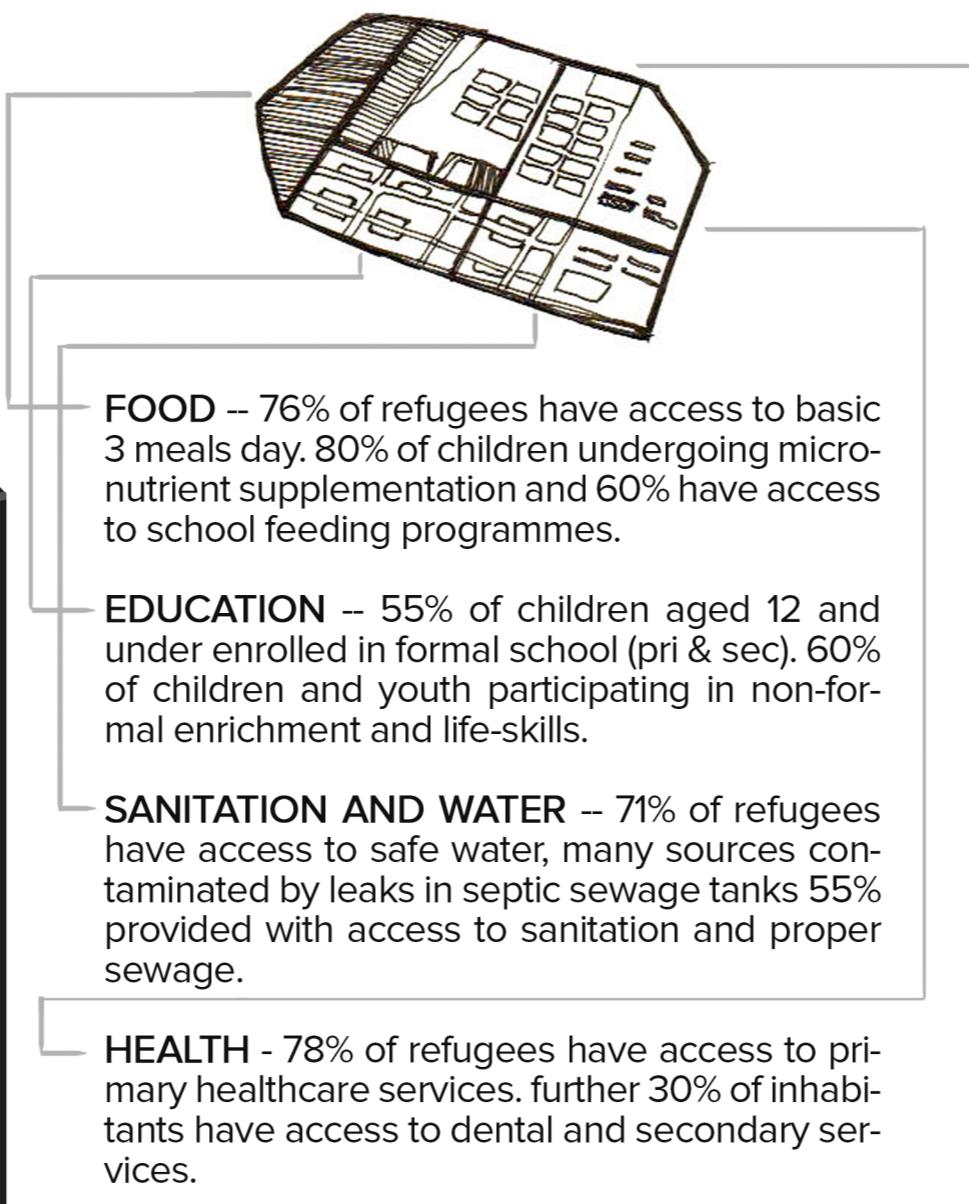

Za'atari Refugee Camp, Jordan faces a problem of overcrowding. This has caused much vexations towards its refugees as long queues snake daily for basic amenities such as sanitation. From the array of problems faced by the refugees daily, improper sanitation as a result of overcrowding could cause a cesspool of issues such as hygiene, health hazards and inconvenience to fester.

constraints

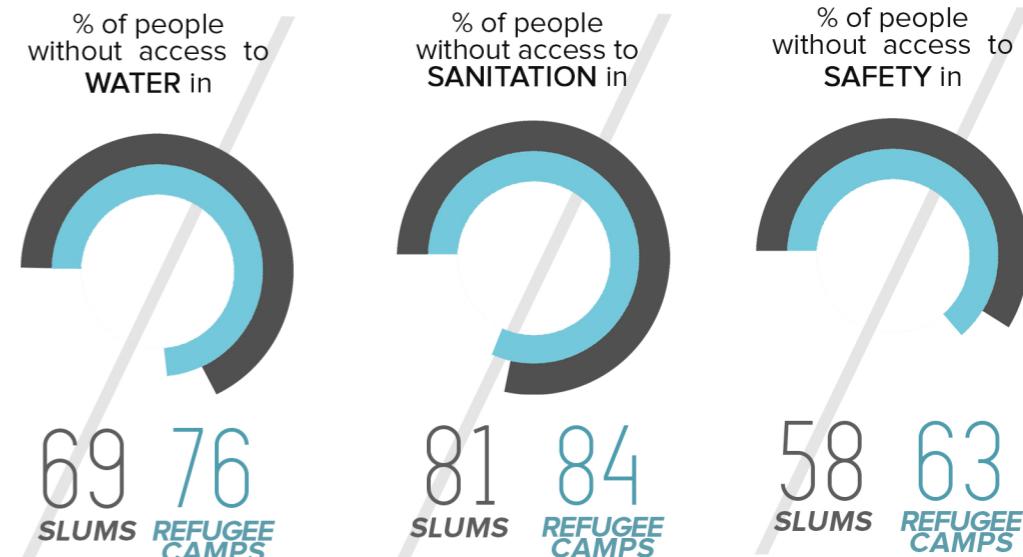

- // New cases of waterborne and water-related diseases are appearing in the camp on a weekly basis, including diarrhoea, scabies and hepatitis A.
- // Poorly planned layouts of sanitation facilities and overcrowding has caused rowdy queues for the refugees.
- // Water trucks have been hijacked and water tanks have been vandalised. Eg. breaking of water taps for water to flow faster.
- // Many refugees erect their own makeshift toilets. Their unhygienic conditions form a breeding ground for flies and parasites.
- // Women who visit the bathroom at night face sexual threats.
- // The UN-issued bathrooms are of poor quality, some bathrooms do not have flushing water and functioning taps. Many of them are choked by toilet paper.

PROBLEM S T A T S

Za'atari Camp is currently one of the fastest growing refugee camps in the world. Although the population may be growing in size, its facilities are still lacking in many areas. Reports of social problems stemming from overcrowding make regular appearances on the news.
